Mar 6, 2012 This was our first taste of Bolivia and we thoroughly enjoyed the first part of our journey but as we got to the border and took a river bus there was a nasty mix up. We were told to board a bus to San Vicente, about 3 hours away. It was a new bus so there were only 5 or 6 seats left and we were in the back of the bus so we had to stand in the rain. When we arrived at San Vicente we couldn't find our bus to the border. We were told to get out and wait. After about 2 hours we were told to go back to the bus station to get another bus to the border. It was 6pm and we were tired and hungry and hadn't been to bed for 12 hours. We ended up travelling for 1.5 hours in the dark through muddy road with cattle tracks and no pavement, very hard going. It was a pretty rickety bus and the road was full of potholes. When we arrived at the border, we still hadn't seen our bus, the border official was busy with a search at the time so we had to wait for someone to come to help. There were a few jeeps lined up waiting so we climbed into the back and the journey was well worth the cost. It was one of the most uncomfortable bus journeys we have ever taken. We were too tired to think straight, standing in the back with no seat-belts, just a rope for a seat. nbsp; Towards the end of our journey we were met at the border by bus drivers and had seats, a welcome respite! We were soon home and relaxed in our warm beds, free from the cold, wet and uncomfortable bus journey. ff5c0681f1 .
