A judge said that none of the articles of impeachment against President Trump advanced “any legitimate grievance,” and therefore there was no reason for the impeachment proceedings. In the ruling, Judge S. James Otero of the Federal District Court in San Francisco, Calif., said the two articles of impeachment filed against Trump do not advance any legitimate grievance against the president and therefore there is no need to consider them any further, Politico reported. “Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate any legitimate grievance against President Trump, let alone an impeachable one,” Judge Otero said. “I would say there’s no purpose in even looking at the articles, because none of them states a legitimate grievance or impeachable offense,” he continued. Judge Otero ruled the articles would not be considered any further. The articles were filed in January after the House Judiciary Committee said it would move forward with impeachment. (Photo by Win McNamee/Getty Images) Judge Otero ruled that members of Congress did not have the right to present articles of impeachment in the first place. “The court concludes that the House Judiciary Committee’s invocation of the impeachment power of the House was unconstitutional because it violated separation-of-powers principles,” Judge Otero said. President Trump has said he is relieved that Judge Otero has dismissed the articles of impeachment against him. “There was no due process, no fair process,” President Trump told reporters Monday. “The House Republicans abused their power, they have no right to do that.” “It wasn’t about me, it was about the country,” the president added. “They wanted to go after the president.” President

Trump said there was “no due process”
