Pulmonary hypertension is the leading complication after heart and lung transplantation in infants. There is conflicting evidence of the impact of the pulmonary vascular anatomy and maturation in the prediction of pulmonary hypertension in preterm infants. We assessed the influence of the vascular anatomy, branching pattern, and anatomic maturity, including the vascular structures of the lung, on early post-transplantation pulmonary hypertension in preterm infants. A PubMed search for preterm infants after heart and lung transplantation with RHD was conducted to identify preterm infants with pre- and post-transplantation follow-up. Demographics, echocardiographic findings, and the vascular network anatomy, including each branching and hernia-related structures, were assessed. Sixteen infants were included, and the mean gestational age was 35.6

weeks. There were no significant differences between the baseline parameters, except for the presence of hernias. All infants showed a significant improvement of their pulmonary arterial pressure after transplantation. Fifty-five percent of the pre-transplantation studies showed abnormal vascular network anatomy, which positively correlated with the presence of pulmonary hypertension. All infants with hernia-related vascular structures also showed significantly elevated pulmonary arterial pressure, but without a difference in arterial pressures according to the severity of hernias. Pulmonary hypertension after heart and lung transplantation in preterm infants improves after transplantation. Pulmonary hypertension is associated with abnormal vascular network anatomy and lung hernias. The presence of hernias, but not the severity, showed a significantly elevated pulmonary arterial pressure in preterm infants.

Q: Accessing text file with `open` and `readlines` raises an exception I'm using Python 3.6.3 and here is the issue: `import open # First, I can open the file: with open("test.txt", 'r') as f: # and extract the lines, for example data = f.readlines()` print(data) As I type this code into the editor, it successfully prints the lines, even though the file is closed. ba244e880a
