If the code is run on startup, then it tries to create a new instance of the program on startup. If that fails, the installer just installs the program without running it. In this case, the installer is trying to install the program onto a system that doesn't have an existing instance of the program. Since it can't, it's trying to create a new instance. If you want to run it after installation, run it from the command line. Q: Is it possible to have a separate redirect rule for each sub domain? I would like to have different redirect rules for different sub domains of my website. I want one for example.com and one for *.example.com. But if I simply add a redirect rule for example.com, it will also redirect *.example.com. I could easily set the new redirect rule to a higher priority, but then I will not be able to redirect an existing page. Is it possible to have a separate redirect rule for each sub domain, but at the same time to be able to handle a redirect from *.example.com?
