I'm trying to use querySelector and querySelectorAll to find a link by id or class name: Not sure why this isn't working. Any ideas? Thanks A: Assuming there is only one link with this class name, try $(".myLinkClass") instead. You are initializing the scope of the jQuery object to the the document, which doesn't have any such elements. Updated Demo. A: A querySelector method looks for a child of the first parent (in this case, the document) with a certain class. It will search down only one level of children. In your example, your links do not exist within a child of the document. $("#thisDoesNotExist") $("#myLinkClass") $("#div:contains('Link')") $(".myLinkClass") As always, you should use the best approach for the task at hand. If you want to target a particular tag, it should be within that tag. If it is within the tag, then use that tag. If it's within that tag, select a higher level element. If the only place to use an id is within the tag itself, then it's better to use that tag. Q: Weld assembly and O2 I have an XJB project, and I have made the deploy. Both the services and the war are on the same server. This works, but I have to use a system property for the server. I don't want to put the system property in the
