We know that you're just as excited about it as we are and we wanted to share the progress we've made in recent months. Lately, we've been busy working on features and fixes, including some of the more recent additions we've made to

Competitive Play. You can read more about some of these features here, but what I want to focus on for this post is the progress we're making behind the scenes with our integration of Game Center. We've recently made significant strides in our efforts to bring Game Center support to Overwatch. As we continue to increase our efforts to port our current features over to the Game Center API, we realized the existing inventory of heroes needed to be updated to better reflect our Game Center experience. A few weeks ago, we brought the full lineup of heroes to the iOS and Android versions of Overwatch. We also added a Hero Gallery to the iPhone app, listing the heroes by category and their weapon loadouts. We wanted to continue to improve the user experience we've got already and we knew the hero inventory list would be a great way to do this. Specifically, we want to highlight how the Hero Gallery is the next step in a natural progression of features we've been developing that began when we added the Hero Gallery to the mobile versions of our game. Adding the Hero Gallery meant we had to update our inventory list. As of now, we've completely reworked the hero inventory list to be brought over to the Game Center API. This includes updating the name of every hero, changing its icon, and updating its stats in Game Center. We've also begun to make a few other changes, some of which you'll see below. Good 'ol Doomfist The updated screenshot above shows the new font and name we've put in for Doomfist. On the flip side, you'll notice that the name has been changed from "E.V
