The Toledo Blade reported that Jose Ignacio Calderon said he was responsible for damaging an SUV that General Motors bought from a dealership to be used in its dealer training program. Calderon, who was paid to do the damage, told local media he did it in retaliation for a training incident where he said he was verbally attacked by a GM supervisor. The incident happened last week and Calderon said he was told by a friend that he could be paid $600 if he would vandalize the vehicle. “I didn’t want to do it, I was scared,” Calderon told the Blade. “He didn’t want to give me the money and I told him, ‘I don’t have anything to do with that, this is a crime.’” “He said I should do it, I should just do it. I told him, ‘Man, it’s a crime, I can’t do that,’” Calderon said. GM said the company has
