... and national in the Philippines?" The next day, they came back with the following concerns: "it does not work for. . . it does not format Mac drive.. it does not use the Bluetooth as external USB. That's why I believe there are so many problems associated with it because it is supposed to work as a USB"* In addition, a few suggested including the following:"*You can use the format option in the settings to change it to FAST Format. It does not require a manual format. . .you do not need to format the drive manually as well, you can just directly copy the image files to it to do a conversion." . . .To use it as a printer, just unplug the printer and attach it to the reader. You may need to set it to USB, and USB as its default. I think the computer can support it. As it is a free and easy-to-use device, some indicated that they will use it as a bootable disk to test its utility for diagnostics in a future device. 5. Discussion {#sec5} =====

This pilot study has explored the perception of older adults (55 years old and above) in the Philippines about the use of mobile technology and its future applications for seniors. Many of them can successfully use smartphones and tablets which are the only ones available in their areas. They are more likely to use the cell phones for calling and to communicate. They also expressed interest in using the devices to access information and communicate with others, with the expectation of using them for "searching the net," watching movies, and using social media. Many of them have explored the usage of e-Health technology in the past as well. Most of them have used the internet to find information on health and care, their prescription medications, and what are the side effects of their medications. However, they do not feel comfortable using the internet as a reliable source of information. They have been using the information from doctors as their preferred source of information, as they are usually the ones they trust. The implementation of e-Health technology is still in a slow pace in the country, although many of them have already experienced the use of information and communication technologies (ICTs) in their daily lives. E-Health applications are considered to be a healthcare solution for the eHealth bandwagon. However, it has not been widely
