The worry, according to a U.S. Treasury report issued on Friday, is that Iran could use its overseas holdings to fund sanctioned activities inside the country. "With potential access to hundreds of billions of dollars' worth of frozen Iranian assets in banks, commodity exchanges, and foreign currency accounts, the Iranian government could also generate tens of billions of dollars per year to finance pro-Tehran institutions and a secret military program under development by the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps," the report said. "Unreported financial transactions, misappropriated funds and corrupt officials have enabled the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps and the government of Iran to access vast financial resources," it added. U.S. officials are concerned that there is too much money linked to Iran to stop it from financing destabilizing activities such as arming militias in the Middle East, posing an increased threat to U.S. forces in the region, and anti-Israeli activities. The U.S. government has issued tough sanctions on Iran over its nuclear energy program. The latest sanctions target Iran's banking sector, which was hit hard by earlier sanctions. In the past, however, Iranian officials have said that they have been successful at luring the money abroad. This report was published as the Iranian economy is already showing signs of deteriorating, with inflation hitting a 14-year high. The International Monetary Fund recently estimated a 15 percent drop in Iran's GDP in 2016, and a 20 percent drop next year. The currency has already experienced hyperinflation in recent years. The argument has been made that by restricting the amount of money in the country and by further disrupting the economy with new sanctions, it is 3e33713323
