A study of the effects of a brief vitamin D3 supplementation on postural control among those living in the mountains. The purpose of the study was to examine the effects of a short-term oral vitamin D(3) supplementation on postural control. Thirty-six healthy women aged between 20 and 30 years living in a mountainous area in Greece were randomly allocated into a control or supplemented group. Supplementation group participants took 1,000 IU of vitamin D(3) daily for 4 weeks, while the control group took placebo. Postural control was examined before and after the supplementation period using a stabilometric platform. The evaluation included measurements of mean values of the displacement, standard deviation, root mean square of the average velocity, sway area and total sway path. The sway area and total sway path were significantly improved in the vitamin D(3)-supplemented group as compared with the control group. These results suggest that a brief vitamin D(3) supplementation for 4 weeks might contribute to improvement in postural control. Q: 3 links in HTML heading I have a table with 3 links. W32.Korgo Removal Tool is a small-sized program developed to eliminate the W32.Korgo virus from infected machines. It does not require installation or user assistance. You can drop the executable file anywhere on the hard disk and click it to run, as well as save it to a USB flash disk or similar storage unit, in order to use it on any infected computer with minimum effort. What's more, W32.Korgo Removal Tool does not add new entries to the Windows registry and Start menu, or files to any part of the disk. The interface is represented by a simple window and layout, where you can start the scanning procedure with the click of a button. The virus is removed on sight, so user intervention is not required, which makes W32.Korgo Removal Tool ideal for novices when it comes to antivirus software. The program barely uses CPU and memory, so it doesn't affect overall performance. Since it can be minimized to the taskbar, it doesn't interrupt normal activity either. In conclusion, W32.Korgo Removal Tool serves its purpose. Users should keep in mind that this utility does not come packed with a real-time protection module, so it is essential to install an antivirus application to safeguard your system.
