Its main goal is to create a complete system for writing and publishing scientific articles with ease. The interface is very friendly and it does not require any other package, but it is not a general purpose application that you can use for other purposes. It contains a powerful and extended set of macro commands, that when used properly, allow the production of very professional documents. The package has been developed by a small team, and it is perfectly integrated in the Mac OS system. It has also been tested and supports all the current versions of the system, including the newest 10.7 Lion. How to use it: The installation process can be done with the MacTeX installer, which is included in the package. After installing MacTeX, open the program and type in the text field the TeX or ConTeXt source that you would like to write. MacTeX provides a very powerful set of commands that allow you to create sophisticated documents, containing all the formatting required for modern printed and digital publications. Users are recommended to take advantage of the available document types (or the included LaTeX commands, with the help of which users can design their own document types). The source text should be formatted in TeX (LaTeX) to facilitate the compilation. Please note that some commands may appear within the body of the document, and the format rules for the document body and the document preamble should be adhered to. When you have finished the writing process, you can preview the results with the built-in previewer. An additional command line can be activated to generate a PostScript file. How to use it: The installation process can be done with the MacTeX installer, which is included in the package. After installing MacTeX, open the program
