This is a multi-part question that involves two different kinds of questions. The first one is how do you figure out the value of the most significant digit in the number 2,857. I figured it out to be 7. I was able to figure this out by using the coding of the respective decimal numbers. Then I listed each value of the decimal and added them up. The total I got for this question is 2,857, so I went to part two. Part 2: What type of pattern is the list of the values after I added up the decimal values in the previous question? I went to the printout that I created in the previous question and counted. Here is the pattern I found. I went ahead and asked this question on the website before writing up this question. A: There are two possibilities: Either you've miscounted, or Either someone else has already asked that exact question. It looks as if the former is the case, because you've gotten your answers to questions 2 and 3 before they've been asked. It looks as if the latter is the case, because the question you ask is identical to those already asked, but has not yet received an accepted answer. If it is indeed identical, vote to close with a link to the question you've asked. You can optionally comment explaining why you think you've got the right answer. Q: How to display multiple input text in a dialog from a class in android studio? In an Android Studio app, I am trying to populate a dialog containing several EditText with info. The app is reading up a JSON from a webservice, and from that JSON, I am getting the number of inputs I need to display in the dialog. And when I do get them, I want to populate the dialog with those inputs (from the multiple JSON objects). I am trying to do it this way (taking advantage of the Fragments and Dialogs in android studio): public void onResponse(JSONObject response) throws JSONException { // Parsing json data response List 3e33713323
