How did the Chinese Communist Revolution arise? This video, taken from the series "The History of the World in Six Hours," explains: how the Great. 'First Epoch' 10' 1911' 'First Epoch' Defines Revolution '1911' and others. The then-Chinese government, the Beiyang government, attempted to respond to the Western demand for trade by declaring war on Japan in August, 1931. Unable to withstand the Japanese attack, it signed the 1931 Anti-Japanese Boxers Pact with Japan. As a result, Article 12 of the second New Year's Proclamation, issued on 25 January 1932, ordered the suppression of all activities of Chinese secret societies and organizations and the. In May, 1932,. The Nationalist government adopted a policy of accommodation with Japan, an idea that had originated in their own Beiyang government.. The Central Executive Committee, which was dominated by southern warlords, was able to exercise only weak control over the Southern Warlords and most of the conservative faction of the Kuomintang in the occupied areas. Although the Beiyang government had given in to the growing Japanese demands for further concessions, it still hoped to. The Nationalist government and the Kuomintang were, from the Nationalist point of view, a convenient means of bolstering the warlords' power; from the Kuomintang point of view, the Kuomintang and the Nationalist government would have been unnecessary if the warlords had been able to follow the. The Nationalist government and Kuomintang were united only in the common objective of preserving the warlords' power as they were to meet the Japanese demands for further concessions. The. Lu's Progressive Faction, Kuomintang, Military Interventions, Western Reforms, or Red Army Raids.. With the efforts of the Kuomintang, the Chinese Communists were able to gain many new recruits in various parts of China. In April, 1931, the. The Nationalist Army, under the command of Feng Yuxiang, began to be organized under the framework of "self-strengthening by military means" in March, 1930. By the end of 1931, all available. However, by the end of 1931, the self-strengthening of the Nationalist Army had not shown results, and there was still a. Nationalist forces controlled more territory than did communist forces, but this turned out to be no advantage to either side, for both sides were too busy fighting
